As a result of the Lundquist case, the Federal Reserve Board completely revamped the disclosure requirements applicable to auto leases, resulting in vastly improved disclosures to consumers.

31. Gordon v. Boden is the first decision approving "fluid recovery" in an Illinois class action. Elder v. Coronet Insurance held that an insurance company's reliance on lie detectors to process claims was an unfair and deceptive trade practice.

32. Continuation of the legal services provided for in the LPG Legal Services Agreements (Exhibit A to Appendix A) is not beneficial to consumers.

33. The fee structure contained in the Legal Services Agreements is inherently illegal. They provide for LPG to charge and receive money for removing debts from consumers' credit reports before such services were fully performed. (Appendix A, ¶71). They provide for payments over a period of months, beginning the month after execution, and months before the form letters demanding removal of "tradelines" were sent out. (Exhibit A to Appendix A). This violates 15 U.S.C. §1679b(b), which prohibits receiving payment before services are fully performed.

34. The advancing of funds to LPG by "investors" such as Validation Partners and the transfer of moneys to such "investors" by LPG assumes that it is permissible to contract for a stream of payments by a consumer prior to the performance of services. The allegedly secured status of such "investors" likewise assumes that is permissible. Similarly, the Trustee's proposal to sell LPG's contract rights likewise assumes that it is permissible to contract for a stream of payments by a consumer prior to the performance of services. It isn't.

35. The principal "service" LPG undertook to provide under its Legal Services Agreements was the removal of debts from consumer's credit reports. LPG first sent clients' creditors a form letter asserting that their debts were illegal and demanding that they cease and desist from further communications to the client. LPG then sent a form letter to the major credit bureaus disputing the client's debts and demanding "the immediate removal/deletion of this account from my credit report . . ." (Appendix A, Exhibits G-J).

36. The letters did not assert anything amounting to a reasonable legal basis for disputing the debts or demanding their removal. Furthermore, credit bureaus generally take the position that the Fair Credit Reporting Act does not require them to inquire into legal challenges to debts, as opposed to factual challenges, such as identity theft. I do not believe that this is a correct reading of the FCRA, and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau does not believe it is, either, but some courts support the bureaus, and sending letters to credit bureaus insisting that debts are illegal without commencing legal action against the creditors or debt collectors involved is not a productive endeavor.

37. Sometimes consumers have a reasonable basis for disputing or attacking the legality of debts. See Collection Litigation: Representing the Debtor (Illinois Institute for Continuing Legal Education 2022), Chapters V (difficulties in proving debts) and VI (substantive defenses), for Illinois law on the subject. LPG does not appear to inquire whether such bases exist, much less assert them.

38. The sending of baseless disputes is not beneficial to the consumer. If the information LPG is disputing is correct, the credit bureaus will not delete the account, or will simply re-report the account upon verifying its accuracy. On the contrary, it is harmful. If a consumer has a real dispute at some point, the fact that he or she has made baseless disputes makes it harder to assert a legitimate dispute.

39. A common reaction on the part of creditors who received LPG's form letters was to commence litigation against the consumer. Carolyn Beech, for example, was served with summonses and complaints on two of the debts that LPG had undertaken to negotiate for her. (Appendix A, ¶ 61).

40. To deal with this problem, LPG hired lawyers in various states to defend the consumers and negotiate settlements.

41. LPG paid these attorneys – from the amounts paid by the consumers to LPG – before they had completed their services.

42. Furthermore, it appears that the lawyers hired by LPG are general practice attorneys who do not concentrate on the representation of consumers.

43. There is a community of lawyers who do represent consumers – see <https://www.consumeradvocates.org/> – but those hired by LPG are not part of it.

44. Any consumer attorney who learned of the facts relating to LPG or a similar organization would advise the consumer to sue LPG.

45. For this reason, there is an inherent conflict of interest on the part of any attorney hired by a credit repair organization to represent its customers.
